91) Analyze the federal government's division of powers between its three branches.

Answer: The federal government is divided into three branches:

Article I: Legislative branch—Article I of the Constitution establishes the legislative branch of the federal government. The legislative branch is responsible for making federal law. This branch is bicameral; that is, it consists of the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives.

Collectively, they are referred to as U.S. Congress, or simply Congress. Each state has two senators in the U.S. Senate. The number of representatives to the U.S. House of Representatives is determined according to the population of each state. The current number of representatives is determined by the most recent census.

Article II: Executive branch—Article II of the Constitution establishes the executive branch of the federal government by providing for the election of the president and vice-president. The president is not elected by popular vote, but instead is selected by the Electoral College, whose representatives are appointed by state delegations. The executive branch of the government is responsible for enforcing federal law.

Article III: Judicial branch—Article III of the Constitution establishes the judicial branch of the federal government by establishing the U.S. Supreme Court and providing for the creation of other federal courts by Congress. The judicial branch of the government is responsible for interpreting the U.S. Constitution and federal law.

92) Why are checks and balances built into the Constitution? Discuss with examples.

Answer: Certain checks and balances are built into the Constitution to ensure that no one branch of the federal government becomes too powerful. For instance, the judicial branch has authority to examine the acts of the other two branches of government and determine whether those acts are constitutional. The executive branch can enter into treaties with foreign governments only with the advice and consent of the Senate. The legislative branch is authorized to create federal courts and determine their jurisdiction and to enact statutes that change judicially made law.

93) The state of Ambalin is home to the city that is considered to be the electronics capital of the world as it hosts a number of electronic manufacturing companies. The state legislature of Ambalin imposed a 150 percent tax on any electronic goods imported from a foreign country and sold in Ambalin, but did not impose any tax on domestic electronic goods sold in Ambalin. Discuss the implications of passing such a tax.

Answer: The Ambalin tax violates the Foreign Commerce Clause and is therefore unconstitutional and void. The federal government, however, could enact a 150 percent tax on all foreign automobiles sold in the United States, but not on domestic automobiles sold in the United States, and that law would be valid. The Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution gives the federal government the exclusive power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. This is called the Foreign Commerce Clause. Direct and indirect regulation of foreign commerce by state or local governments that unduly burdens foreign commerce violates the Commerce Clause and is therefore unconstitutional.

94) How has the Internet revolutionized commerce? Discuss its impact on the Constitution.

Answer: The advent of the Internet has caused a revolution in how commerce is conducted. The Internet and other computer networks permit parties to obtain website domain names and conduct business electronically. This is usually referred to as electronic commerce or e-commerce. Some businesses that conduct e-commerce over the Internet do not have any physical location, whereas many "brick-and-mortar" businesses augment their traditional sales with e-commerce sales as well. Currently, a significant portion of the sales of goods, licensing of intellectual property, and sales of services are accomplished through e-commerce. Because e-commerce is commerce, it is subject to the Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution.

95) The state of Carterbridge regulates the sale of liquor within its boundaries. It passes a statute permitting in-state liquor stores to sell liquor directly to customers and prohibits out-of-state liquor houses from selling liquor directly to customers. Delightful Dreamz, a liquor store from a neighboring state, challenges the statute passed by the state legislation of Carterbridge, alleging violation of the Commerce Clause. Discuss the outcome of the allegation made by Delightful Dreamz.

Answer: The statute passed by the state of Carterbridge that discriminates against out-of-state liquor houses in favor of in-state liquor stores is likely to cause an undue burden on interstate commerce which is in violation of the Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution. If the federal government has chosen not to regulate an area of interstate commerce that it has the power to regulate under its Commerce Clause powers, this area of commerce is subject to what is referred to as the Dormant Commerce Clause. A state, under its police power, can enact laws to regulate that area of commerce. However, if a state enacts laws to regulate commerce that the federal government has the power to regulate but has chosen not to regulate, the Dormant Commerce Clause prohibits the state's regulation from unduly burdening interstate commerce.

96) The city of Newvale removes a billboard on the highway that was put up by Fizzard, Inc., a soft drink manufacturer, advertising the soft drink it had launched recently. The city council removed the billboard as they feared that it would distract motorists and other road users. Fizzard challenges the decision taken by the city council of Newvale. Discuss if the city council of Newvale is justified in prohibiting billboards.

Answer: The city of Newvale can prohibit billboards along its highways for safety and aesthetic reasons since this is a lawful place restriction. Commercial speech, such as advertising, was once considered unprotected by the First Amendment. However, today, because of U.S. Supreme Court decisions, the content of commercial speech is protected but is also subject to time, place, and manner restrictions.

97) Discuss the circumstances under which certain speech would not be protected by the First Amendment and be totally forbidden by the government.

Answer: The U.S. Supreme Court has held that certain speech is unprotected speech that is not protected by the First Amendment and may be totally forbidden by the government. The Supreme Court has held that the types of speech that are considered unprotected speech include dangerous speech, fighting words that are likely to provoke a hostile or violent response from an average person, speech that incites the violent or revolutionary overthrow of the government, defamatory language, child pornography, and obscene speech.

98) How does the Supreme Court decide whether the government's different treatment of people or businesses violates or does not violate the Equal Protection Clause?

Answer: The Supreme Court has adopted three different standards of review for deciding whether the government's different treatment of people or businesses violates or does not violate the Equal Protection Clause. They include the strict scrutiny test, intermediate scrutiny test, and rational basis test.

The strict scrutiny test is a test that is applied to classifications based on suspected classes such as race, national origin, and citizenship, and fundamental rights such as voting.

The intermediate scrutiny test is a test that is applied to classifications based on protected classes such as gender.

The rational basis test is a test that is applied to classifications not involving a suspect or protected class.

99) Compare and contrast substantive due process and procedural due process.

Answer: The substantive due process category of due process requires that government statutes, ordinances, regulations, and other laws be clear on their face and not overly broad in scope. The test of whether substantive due process is met is whether a "reasonable person" could understand the law to be able to comply with it. Laws that do not meet this test are declared void for vagueness. The procedural due process form of due process requires that the government give a person proper notice and hearing of legal action before that person is deprived of his or her life, liberty, or property.

100) The city of Colrida is considered to be the automobile capital of the world. The state it is part of passed a statute that required employers to hire local residents in preference to non-residents. Discuss the implications of enforcing such a statute.

Answer: The statute passed by the state of Colrida would be considered unconstitutional and void since a state cannot enact a law that prevents residents of other states from owning property or participating in businesses in that state. The purpose of the U.S. Constitution is to promote nationalism. If the states were permitted to enact laws that favored their residents over out-of-state residents, the concept of nationalism would be defeated. Article IV of the Constitution contains the Privileges and Immunities Clause, which provides that "The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several states." The Fourteenth Amendment contains the Privileges or Immunities Clause, which provides that "No State shall make or enforce any law that shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States." Collectively, the clauses prohibit states from enacting laws that unduly discriminate in favor of their residents. Note that the clauses apply only to citizens; they do not protect corporations or aliens.
