46. Penelope takes classes at a community college during the day and works as a waitress at a very busy restaurant at night. She has performed well in school but has hassles at work that leave her feeling very stressed and anxious. She has very long days, and after she gets home from work, she tends to drink alcohol to de-stress and forget about her day. Sometimes she goes out with friends and sometimes she drinks alone. During finals week she found herself drinking more than usual and feeling sick while taking her exams. She felt depressed, and when she got her grades she knew she had to change her drinking habit to be more successful in school and in life. As Penelope's friend, use what you have learned in the chapter to offer her at least five strategies to help her overcome this negative habit.

47. Choose a long-term goal you would like to accomplish. Describe how you will apply the Adult Learning Cycle to achieve this goal.

48. Name the 10 qualities of a peak performer. Describe each habit and use evidence from your life to demonstrate how you use this habit to reach peak performance, or how you will establish this habit to reach peak performance.

49. Discuss a change you would like to see in your personal habits. Describe three types of resistance you may experience in trying to make this change, and name five strategies you will use to overcome these resistors.

50. Ramone is a change manager. His job is to go into companies to help manage major changes affecting a large portion of employees. Ramone just took a position in helping a corporation train its people to adapt to a new building and a new way of conducting their business. People will no longer be working in a cubicle with their own space. Instead, they will be working in communal workspaces they must share with others, including their storage area. They must not only learn the art of sharing their space with grace, but also must learn to be ultra-organized as a common courtesy. Describe three resistors you believe Ramone must train employees to overcome in order to accept this change in a positive manner. For each resistor, provide three strategies Ramone may suggest to help people accept this change with a positive attitude.

51. Describe a difficult change you were forced to make in your life, including the resistors you faced and the strategies you used to overcome them. Do they connect to the resistors and strategies covered in this chapter? Would the information from this chapter have helped you make this change, and if so, how?

52. Imagine you cannot seem to give up eating sweets during the week. You need to make this change because you are at risk for diabetes. Write up the five elements of a commitment contract you will use to make this positive change in your life.

Chapter 02 Test Bank Key

1. When someone sees opportunity in a setback, they are being
 - A. responsible.
 - B. honest.
 - C. engaged.
 - D. resilient.

Adversity happens to everyone. Even good students sometimes forget assignments, miss deadlines, and score low on tests. You can't always change circumstances, but you always have a choice about how you rebound and prepare to win next time. The key is to make adversity and setbacks work for you. This is what's called being resilient.

- A. know where you want to go and set realistic goals to get there.
- B. stand true to your current beliefs.
- C. realize when you have been defeated.
- D. accept that your opinion does not count.

Creativity and critical thinking are not just skills. They are qualities that you can develop into habits. Expand your sense of adventure and originality in problem solving, and learn to think critically and creatively. Challenge your beliefs and try new approaches. Critical thinking also helps you distinguish between an inconvenience and a real problem.

27. Our attitudes

- A. do not influence our relationships.
- B. influence how we see ourselves.
- C. are unrelated to our interactions with the world in general.
- D. must be accepted.

Each of us has attitudes or beliefs about people and events, and these attitudes influence what parts of our perception we allow our brain to interpret and what parts we filter out. Our attitudes shape the way we relate to others and to the world, and even how we see ourselves. Most of us do not see the entire meaning in a situation or have difficulty seeing "the big picture."

- A. Trigger
- B. Patience
- C. Understanding
- D. Empathy

There are three main parts to building a new habit: the trigger, the behavior, and the reward. Triggers can be anything. Some are visual, some are auditory, and some are tactile. Some triggers relate to a certain place or time of day.

29. Which of the following statements is true?

- A. You can tackle as many habits as you want when focusing on replacing old behaviors with new ones that work better.
- B. We should allow ourselves at least a month to adjust to a new habit. If we fall short one day, we should try something new to replace the old habit.
- C. When dealing with difficulty in changing one's negative habits, one should: 1) Discard what doesn't work, 2) practice, and 3) build in rewards.
- D. Tenley just earned a political science degree and accepted a position at a law firm she admires. She would like to be a partner of the law firm one day but first needs to go to law school. Tenley is engaged in setting specific goals.

Tenley has a clear goal of being a partner and a smaller goal of going to law school.

- A. I missed class so now I'm going to fail.
- B. I missed my study group meeting so maybe I can get summaries from the group.
- C. I failed the exam, so why even try?
- D. Yesterday was a hard day, but today seems even more challenging.

Glass-half-full individuals practice the ability to see the good qualities in themselves and others and the positive side of situations. They dispute negative thoughts with critical thinking, and use creative problem solving to explore the best alternatives. For example, "I missed my study group meeting. I'll e-mail my test questions to the group, apologize, and offer to do extra summaries for the next meeting. This situation has reminded me how important it is to check my calendar each morning."

He feels like when he finally accepts a major change in the workplace, he is faced with a new change that seems too daunting to embrace, as he must change the way he does business once again. If he wants to be valued as an employee, what should Kerry do?

- A. Kerry would benefit by making a contract for change to overcome the barriers.
- B. Kerry should accept his shortcomings and move on.
- C. Kerry would benefit by getting a different job where he will be appreciated.
- D. Kerry would be served best by ignoring his fears.

Change creates uncertainty. Some people even choose the certainty of misery over the uncertainty of pleasure. Fear blocks creativity, causes the imagination to run wild, and makes everyday frustrations look catastrophic. Kerry would be best served by making a contract for change to overcome the barriers rather than ignoring them.

- A. Lack of awareness
- B. Fear of the unknown
- C. Embarrassment
- D. Environment

Due to daily pressures, you may not recognize the need to make changes until there is a crisis. This concept is best demonstrated by the boiled-frog syndrome. Neurobiologist Robert Ornstein explained that, if you put a frog in a pot of water and heat the water very slowly, the frog remains in the pot. The frog does not detect the gradual change in temperature until it boils to death. Sometimes you may be so preoccupied by daily pressures that you are unaware of the signals your body is giving you.

46. Penelope takes classes at a community college during the day and works as a waitress at a very busy restaurant at night. She has performed well in school but has hassles at work that leave her feeling very stressed and anxious. She has very long days, and after she gets home from work, she tends to drink alcohol to de-stress and forget about her day. Sometimes she goes out with friends and sometimes she drinks alone. During finals week she found herself drinking more than usual and feeling sick while taking her exams. She felt depressed, and when she got her grades she knew she had to change her drinking habit to be more successful in school and in life. As Penelope's friend, use what you have learned in the chapter to offer her at least five strategies to help her overcome this negative habit.

Answers will vary.

Feedback: She has recognized the need and is willing to change. She should focus on the positive, develop specific goals, start slowly, visualize and affirm success, observe and model others, and be patient and persistent.
